The rancor shown by the Southern press toward General Butler will cause the North, in spite of his imperfections, to revere his memory "for the enemies he has made."

When General Butler was first in Congress, in wandering about the Capitol he found himself far down in his corridors, and encountered a spectral-looking man, of whom he asked: "Are you an official?" "Oh, yes," was the reply; "I am keeper of the Washington clock." Much surprised he re-entered the House, and still more surprised its members by introducing for unanimous consent a resolution to abolish that keepership. No one had ever heard of crypt or office; but a slight investigation showed that early in the century, when it was proposed to rebury General Washington in the Capitol, a crypt was authorized with a keeper and an incumbent appointed. The latter was slightly salaried, and successors served from the time of the elder Adams to that of Lincoln. But after General Butler's discovery the paper and ink crypt was no longer watched.

New ideas in paving have lately attracted attention. Among these is the paving of a bridge by a German engineer with Indian rubber, the result having been so satisfactory as to induce its application on a much larger scale, a point in its favor being that it is more durable than asphalt, and not slippery. In London a section of roadway under the gate leading to the departure platform of the St. Pancras terminus has for some time past been paved with this material, with the effect of deadening the sound made when being passed over on wheels, besides the comfortable elasticity afforded to foot passengers. Another material which is being satisfactorily introduced for this purpose is composed of granulated cork and bitumen pressed into blocks, and which are laid like bricks or wood paving, the special advantage secured in this case being that of elasticity; in roadways it furnishes a fine foothold for horses, and at the same time does away to a great degree with the noise which commonly accompanies city traffic. In Australia this method has been resorted to with excellent results.

They say the price of coal has advanced during the cold weather, that their expenses have been increased, that their wages remain the same and that they cannot make a living on the small stipend allowed by the company. Should the unprecedented demand for coal continue throughout the Ohio Valley, there is a possibility that the miners will win the strike.

It appears to be generally admitted by old river men at Pittsburgh that the present has been the hardest winter since 1856. If the snow should happen to be taken off suddenly by rain, there would no doubt be a flood, the like of which has not occurred for years, as the snow is general throughout the country. However, the ice went out during the spring of 1856 without doing much damage, and it may go out the same way this year.

These sketches will depart from time to time, from the subjects above mentioned and give some of the writer's experience in the West, among the mining camps of Colorado and his trip across the Rocky Mountains and the plains.

Edith Talks Sense.

William Edith, the forger, made a partial confession to Marshal Fitzgerald. He admitted having taken part in writing out the checks, but said he did not write all of them. He did not say who his accomplices were, and also stated that the work was done in the Postoffice lobby, which is not true, as the writing on the checks was in violet ink, whereas that in the Postoffice is black.

According to his latest story concerning his antecedents, his home is in Powell county where he has a wife and child living.

COLONEL BALDWIN.
He is interviewed at Lexington by a "Leader" Reporter.

The report that Colonel W. W. Baldwin, the Turnpike King and prominent politician and farmer, was a candidate for Uncle Jerry Rusk's shoes, is denied by the Colonel himself. True, Colonel Baldwin is big brained and good looking enough for Cabinet timber, but he already has his hands full of business that employs all his time.

In addition to managing the Maysville and Lexington turnpike, he has a big Mason county farm and other property to look after. When it comes to farming he can give Uncle Jerry four acres and shut him out of the game. As to mule raising, Uncle Jerry would not be in it with him any more than he now is in the matter of good looks.

Colonel Baldwin was met to-day at the Phoenix, just as he had ceased praising enthusiastically the group of female beauties displayed in the last issue of THE LITERARY DIGEST, and being asked about his candidacy for Uncle Jerry's place, replied:

"That is all a canard. Just a joke some of the newspaper boys put up on me. I am not a candidate for any office, and don't want any. No, sir, I don't want any office from anybody—Mr. Cleveland or anyone else. I am not ambitious for political preferment. All I want is to make money and go to Heaven. Let's see, one, and then I must catch that train."

The reporter declined and the Colonel hurried off to catch the train, fifteen cents better off than he would have been had the reporter accepted his invitation.

Lost so after our good citizens were abed, wrapped in pleasant dreams and a plethora of covering, faithful employees of the Water Company were digging through a perfect mass of earth in the effort to find and stop the leak at Market and Third streets. Imposition.

A few days ago some people were lounging about a West End grocery during working hours in the establishment where they were known to be employed, and upon being questioned as to their idleness replied that there was no use working when coal and provisions came so easy, meaning, that they had been helped by the Relief Committee, and would, therefore, enjoy a few days holiday.

It seems that no charity can be generally extended that the donors are not informed of the manner in which they are used faithfully to insure the comfort of these very persons who in turn make light of their generosity.

At Aberdeen.

Henry Crawford, Andy Reed, William Applegate and Sam Moore, all living in the West End and employees of the Maysville Cotton Mills, went over to Aberdeen last night.

Of course they patronized the saloons, and not being used to Aberdeen whiskey, (few men are), it soon got the better of them. Marshal Schilitz finally concluded that it was his duty to arrest them. They showed resistance, but the Marshal, aided by a number of assistants, landed the whole crowd.

Reed gave up his watch as security and was allowed to depart. The rest of the boys had to stay all night. The trial comes off this morning at 10 o'clock. The Maysville crowd was pretty well battered up.
